

M. Suzanne Donovan

M. Suzanne Donovan is the founding Executive Director of the Strategic Education Research Partnership (SERP), an education research, development, and implementation organization incubated at the National Academies. SERP operates long-term, “field site” partnerships with school districts and recruits interdisciplinary teams of researchers to work on problems of practice. SERP work spans content areas in K-12 education, including science, mathematics, content-area literacy, leadership, and school and district organization.

Formerly at the National Research Council, Suzanne directed numerous education studies and was the editor of a series of reports that have enjoyed wide distribution, such as: Strategic Education Research Partnership, Learning and Instruction: a SERP Research Agenda, and How People Learn: Bridging Research and Practice. She has a Ph.D. from the University of California, Berkeley and was on the faculty of the Columbia University School of International and Public Affairs, where she taught economics and public policy prior to making the shift to education.
